WHAT IS LIFE STORYTELLING?

Life storytelling results in a beautiful coffee table-style book that family and friends can treasure for years to come. The storytelling process captures memories that may have been forgotten until the person revisits their life through the interview process. When looking at the big picture of life, storytelling provides clarity on the past, appreciation for the present, and inspires hope for the future. Most people have an inner need to understand the meaning and purpose of their lives; life storytelling provides them with the opportunity to see their life more clearly.

Reminiscing and recalling significant life memories can create a wonderful sense of calm and well-being. When shared with a partner, or close family and friends, it brings them closer together and strengthens their bond.

Life storytelling is also a way to remember a loved one lost. By compiling memories of those who loved them, it is a beautiful way to tell the story of their life and create a keepsake for their family and friends.

How does life storytelling work?

For a typical project, Maureen will conduct a 90-minute in-person or remote interview. No preparation for the interview is needed. Maureen prepares the questions, and the interview is a relaxed discussion about the person's life.

Maureen audio-records the conversation, then later transcribes the interview in the person's exact words and formats their responses into a story format.

Clients provide photos to complement the story being told. Once the interview is complete and Maureen has the suggested photos, the client's work is essentially done, except for editing the story draft.

The client is sent the storybook draft, allowing up to two rounds of revisions to reach the final product. The client and family can order printed books, and the client is also provided an electronic copy to share and print. From start to finish, the project takes about eight weeks, but can be expedited if needed.
